Overview:

Belonging Colorado is a timely effort to bring together Coloradans across lines of difference. Our goal is to foster greater belonging across our state so all can thrive. We seek to invest in good ideas for building connections among people of different races, religions, ethnic groups, socioeconomic statuses, ages, and more. Our state is not immune to the trends of social division and disconnection affecting our nation as a whole. At a time of intense social, economic, and environmental challenges, Coloradans must work effectively across differences to support our state's long-term health, resilience, and well-being.

Through this letter of interest(LOI) process, Belonging Colorado is seeking community-based organizations, local governments, and other community-focused entities to participate in the inaugural cohort of Belonging Colorado partners. This cohort will represent a diverse set of organizations that seek to design and implement new—or expand existing—innovative programs that bring people together across lines of difference to address shared challenges, connect on shared interests, and/or deepen community relationships and heal divides.

Representatives from participating organizations will engage in the inaugural Belonging Cohort—an eight-week online training experience to learn about the science of bridging differences. Upon successful completion, participants will refine program ideas designed to bridge divides within their context/community and will be invited to apply for a two-year grant to implement their program. Funded projects will receive ongoing technical assistance during implementation to maximize program effectiveness.
